Our Use of Cookies and Local Storage

This notice explains how Muses of Morenita ("we," "us," or "our") uses cookies and similar browser storage technologies.

What Are Cookies?

Cookies are small text files a website can place on your device. They're commonly used for basic functionality such as keeping you signed in.

What We Actually Use

We don't use cookies for sign-in. Muses of Morenita is a Supabase-backed application, and Supabase Authentication keeps you signed in using your browser's local storage rather than a cookie — practically, the same purpose (staying logged in between visits), a different mechanism (it isn't sent to a server on every request the way a cookie is, and it's cleared if you clear your browser's site data). This is strictly necessary for the platform to function; without it, you'd need to sign in again on every page.

We don't use analytics or advertising trackers. No Google Analytics, Meta Pixel, or any similar tool is present anywhere on this platform, and we don't sell or share data with advertisers.

Third-party resource loading. Pages on this platform load fonts from Google Fonts and, for some features, code libraries from a public content-delivery network (jsDelivr). Loading these resources causes your browser to make a request to those providers' servers, which may log standard connection information (like your IP address) under their own privacy practices — this is a normal part of how any website that uses a font or script host works, not a tracker we've added.

How to Control This

You can clear your browser's local storage and cookies at any time through your browser's settings — doing so will simply sign you out. Instructions for managing site data are available in your browser's own help documentation.

Changes to This Notice

We may update this notice if what we use changes — for example, if we ever introduce analytics tools, we'll disclose that here first. When we do, we'll update the effective date above.
